

MVH3

If the hare ain't live,
it ain't Mt. Vernon.

Run: # 849

Date: August 30, 2003

Hares: Big Sweaty Pussy, Cunning Runt, Dual Airbags, Dr. Jekyll, Full Metal Balls, Hard Drive

Location: Dumfries, south of south

RDR EXCHANGE

The heat index was red, the air quality was red, and the glow over the hare's abode was RED. It was the glare from many a red dress. They were long, they were short, they were sequined; long sleeves, short sleeves, no sleeves. There were 1000s of them, all swaying in the wind. And by the end of the trail, the pack's faces were red, their bodies swaying from heat exhaustion.

Trail

True trail rose away, up the street from the abode of Dual Airbags. The pack moved swiftly and gathered speed with no checks to impede them. I came across hares Dual Airbags and Hard Drive, swiftly walking my way with a LOT of unused flour. I asked them about trail – What the walker's trail? "NO!" – Oh – just go straight and you can catch up to fellow scribe Hops. He asked for a short cut so he could spy upon the pack. Little did we know that Hops ran the short cut so fast he totally missed the pack. "Hops – do you have something else on your mind??"

I saw the walkers carefully working their way through a treacherously muddy area made ever more so by the pack. The cries of OnOn could be heard in the woods past the power lines. Passing the walker's on-in trail (what WAS I thinking when I passed that) it appeared I was in front of the FRBs!! First there was Byte Lightening, Big Bang, Gay Ship Lollipop, Dr. Strangelove, and Just Mark, one of today's virgins. Trail led back off road up through the woods. The FRBs were long gone and the main pack was coming by and turned right, only to find a back check. Burnt Sox retraced his steps, whining that the pack did not mark this. Of course Burnt Sox was standing right on top of a very large, very neat arrow made of branches. Rear Area Security led most of the pack left with a quick flick of the wrist and a gobble bobble gobble! S'not quickly ran left and then left some more and left true trail; soon to be seen in the neighboring county. Snatch Shot and I followed the gobbler, yelled 'on-on' continuously, and yet the rest of the pack did not follow. We could not understand why anyone would not follow harriettes through such virgin and pristine forest. We found out later that Burnt Sox, incensed that anyone would laugh at the JM, led the rest of the pack through the Back Check and actually shortcutted the pack successfully.

Power Line Tease

Out of the woods, into a field of flowers and grass and bugs and water and a view of the power lines. "We must be close." Lots of water and lots of mud. Gooshy slippery slimy mud. Up through the woods, past swamps and lots of bugs, there are always bugs in swamps, to Full Metal Balls and a water check. We confirmed with FMB that we were now at the end of the pack. He tried briefly/bravely to give me a short cut but it looked like his head was starting to hurt so I told him I'd follow Snatch Shot. Ha ha. Luckily the pack marked the trail – give yourselves a hand! Quick Drawers, Womb Bromb, Cork Screwed, and those that did not identify their pack arrows. As it turns out mine was not the only ass saved – or should I say bush? AndHowsHerBush was still out there and found his way in. Back to the Power Lines. There was more than one set or the heat was making them appear everywhere. Up through community after community. I almost gave up and went to Tim's River Shore when I crossed the road that led to it. It had to be closer than the end! More power lines and another back check that the pack marked! God Bless the pack! Finally on in! THE END! Now I know what it's like to be on Survivor! Gimme a beer! Some from that keg of Dominion will do just fine!!
