HASH #911

HARES: BLANK CHECK, SCREWS EVERYBODY, and POOP DECK - -oops, no, that's right, he wasn't a hare this week... we are all just so used to having him hare that I automatically listed him here... so scratch that!

TRAIL REPORT

Whew, another LLOOOONNNGGGG one (at least for the runners)! Our Halloween trail turned into the 'Almost to Richmond Marathon' trail. It was at least a good day for a kick-ass run, a little overcast, started off cool, but warmed up nicely (maybe even a bit too nicely). As has come to be our habit, we got off to a late start. DUAL AIRBAGS finally stepped up and started Father Abraham, as FLYING BURITO was having a private party with WOMB BROOM and LULU. There was an early split for the walkers and runners. To give the hares credit, the marginal runners were warned, they might want to do the walkers trail (this was enough to challenge the manly men (and non-wussy women) to do it anyway). The walkers almost missed the split, but HOT LEGS and BURITO saved the day with their eagle eyes (or they had a hint from SCREWS EVERYBODY). There were a bunch of checks, which is always appreciated, but one U-turn wasn't marked and almost lost the crowd. TITEY HO and WHACK ME SMACK ME got us back on track. DUALS caught us at the last check and pointed us to the on-on, which cut off a few minutes, so we expected to get in before the runners. We did. I mean we really did. At first, everyone was diverted by the amazing homemade chili and beans. MELLOW FORESKIN CHEESE was the first to give up caring and went for seconds (and thirds and maybe more). He said the food is the reason he became a walker, screw the runners if nothing was left!!! For a second there was some worry that after over an hour, even the Hare hadn't made it in, but then we got over it and ate some more. BLACK BOX and GOT BOX entertained the crowd with retirement stories. Lots of talk about tools and pliers. Sounds kinky, see what the rest of you have to look forward to? RED SNAPPER said that ONLY 2? has some broken tools. Poor RES DNAPPER... The FRBs appeared closely behind the Hare. BLANK CHECK (this was his 50th birthday party trail) was quite proud of himself. He did the trail with a GPS (I think he needs lessons on how to work it, where was HOLLOW POINT when you need him). He also mentioned that the last deep water was a virtual splash for YOU'E GOT TAIL. BYTE took a dive in the water twice. The trail was so long (how long was it?!) like life at 50!! BYTE wanted credit for two runs. I didn't stay for the circle (two and a half hours with hashers is about my limit), but I did hear of a few violations. LEAVE IT IN BEAVER was seen washing his hands in the creek. Why were his hands dirty? And why did he think the creek was clean? TORE ASS lost control and let his dog Ernie dash into the front of an on-coming van (fortunately no injuries were sustained, amazing). HARD DRIVE had a fight with a bee, Corona won (the bee flew in and HD almost took a swig before he noticed, yikes). Last we counted, everyone made it back. The best quote of the day goes to 14K COCK who asked the deep question: If a fat guy bitches in the woods, is he really bitching? There was some discussion of what the actual quote was, but close enough, ask him for more details.

On-On till next week,

HASHIT REPORT -

2004-001 is held by PUDKNOCKER who was not present
 2004-004 is held by 14KT Cock. He seems to have a collection: he had an MVH3 hashit, an OTH4 hashit and I think even a SHIT H3 Hashit... but he didn't bring them to the circle. Could this be because they were stolen from him when he put them down in the garage after trail and walked away to go get something to eat?!!?!?!

2004-002 is held by MELLOW FORESKIN CHEESE for saying that he didn't care if the runners didn't get food when they came in. That's why he switched to being a Walker!

2004-003 I understand it ended up in SCREWS EVERYBODY'S car.
